Voyager Demonstrates 360 Video Tours at Inman Connect

(15 July 2006, Santa Fe, NM) Today Voyager announced their plans to exhibit at Inman Connect San Francisco July 25 - 27, 2006.

"Video tours are coming," says Bart Wilson, Chief Marketing Officer at Voyager. "We are going to show off a new 360 video virtual tour technology whereby REALTORS can record a walk through of any property or neighborhood using video -- but navigate it like it were a still 360 panoramic image."

Voyager will be demonstrating the 360 video tour technology at a private room at the Palace Hotel at this year's Inman Connect, July 25th - 27th. Those interested in seeing the new real estate marketing tool are encouraged to call Barry Black, VP of Sales at (505) 474-3194 or 866-902-3600.

"We've seen the 360 video tour in tests ranging from dropping the 360 video camera into the center of 3 River Stadium when it was blown up by a demolition crew. And one user in Italy strapped a Sony video camera and the one shot optic to his motorcycle sissy bar and drove around town with it. We will be showing these and many other exciting uses of this technology to REALTORS at this year's Inman Connect event in San Francisco."

Video 360 virtual tour kits start at $18,949 complete and include a Sony HD video camera, carry case, software, training, steady cam and a Macintosh laptop computer. At the present time, 360 video tours are only able to be processed on a Mac. But playback can take place on either a Mac or PC.

Starter kit systems include the VideoWarp software, one shot optic and training and start at $1,949.
